

Medical Research Institute organizes Breast Cancer Awareness Day

Under the patronage of Dr. Abdel Aziz Qansouh, President of Alexandria University, the Medical Research Institute organized a scientific day in conjunction with the global celebration of Breast Cancer Awareness Month, in the presence of Dr. Amal Ghanem, Dean of the Institute, Dr. Amani Youssef, Vice Dean for Graduate Studies and Research, and Dr. Khaled Matrawy, Vice Dean for Service Affairs Society and Environmental Development, and a group of faculty members and students.

In her speech, the Dean of the Institute welcomed the attendees and emphasized the role of the Institute Medical research in providing diagnosis and treatment services for breast cancer patients, pointing to the integration between the various departments of the institute, and the institute's role in providing awareness, support and assistance against this disease.

Dr. Amani Youssef pointed out that the Institute seeks to integrate the graduate studies and scientific research sector, the community service sector and environmental development, with the aim of directing scientific research towards studying the problems faced by society, including studying breast cancer rates and benefiting from what the results of these research provide, in a way that contributes to solving the problems of society. .

Dr. Khaled Matrawy stressed the community service sector's keenness to actively participate in spreading a culture of awareness of the importance of early detection of breast cancer, and the institute, in conjunction with the global celebration, provided free examination, diagnosis and treatment services to patients attending the institute's outpatient clinics, and provided the necessary x-rays and analyzes for free.

This was followed by a set of presentations that included an explanation of the latest scientific developments in the diagnosis and treatment of breast cancer, which were presented by a group of faculty members at the Institute.
